As a semiconductor device which operates at a high voltage, a power device in which a silicon carbide (SiC) substrate is used as the base is known (e.g., see Patent Documents 1 to 3). However, when a high voltage is applied to the power device, current flows through the gate insulation film and a surface of the silicon carbide substrate. Therefore, a problem such as a leakage current occurs in the gate insulation film. As a method of solving this problem, a technique in which a gate insulation film is formed in the following manner is suggested (e.g., see Patent Document 4). First, a semiconductor layer is formed on a silicon carbide substrate. Subsequently, a heat treatment is performed at a temperature higher than that for the semiconductor layer. As a result, an amorphous silicon carbide film is formed. Subsequently, a processing including removal of part of the amorphous silicon carbide film is performed. As a result, a silicon carbide insulating film is formed. Subsequently, a gate electrode is formed.The Seven Deadliest Viruses Threatening the World and Your Family A virus is a microscopic organism that b7e8fdf5c8
